
Dr. John R. Sanders on how The Woodlands at Furman is rethinking retirement.

hat is a healthy retirement?

Does it include simply good health or is it more? Financial well-being? A healthy state of mind? Confidence in your choices?

These are the questions that led to the foundation of The Woodlands at Furman. Many who are familiar with our life care retirement community tend to think of all the bells and whistles we have on our 22-acre campus connected to Furman University. The Woodlands at Furman has 132 apartment homes, as well as The Arboretum, which includes 32 assisted living apartments, 16 memory support suites and 30 skilled nursing suites.

However, we are a non-profit organization at our core and our message is to create a better retirement lifestyle for all seniors. Being a non-profit means The Woodlands is operating for the community good, has a strong mission to serve, doesn't charge to pay a dividend to owners, operates at the lowest feasible cost, realizes significant savings in taxes, financing and other efficiencies.

We have set-up a board that includes experts in law, finance, hospitality, construction and higher education in order further that goal.

We worked hard to make The Woodlands at Furman, a Life Care Community, which essentially gives seniors more options in managing their financial nest egg while maximizing and preserving their estate when moving into the community. We added Masterpiece Living this year as well. The goal of Masterpiece Living is to create a fulsome retirement that enriches a person's health, social interaction, spiritual well-being and learning.

We also have adopted what we call "The Woodlands Way." This is our guide in conducting the business of The Woodlands at Furman. Essentially, we will use these principles to ensure that we take our responsibilities to our residents, our employees and our community very seriously. Responsibility is our first priority with The Woodlands. ””■
